A college student? Be positive parenting!

Where did the time go, right?

They really do grow up all too quickly, don't they. How was your parenting tips, parenting education, and parenting books helping you along the way here.

But there is still some motivating to be done. The college student is ready to spread his/her wings and fly.

It is completely normal for them to act as if they don't need or want you.

Don't worry, you'll find out it's just an act the first time something goes wrong or they run out of money.

But wait!

Motivating your college student to successful adulthood will happen only when you give them the trust and independence they need to figure out what being a successful adult is. It's not just only be parenting toddlers, teenagers, adult children but you should be the better parenting relationships with your college student now.

Instilling in them a willingness and desire to succeed means you will allow them to bear or enjoy the consequences of their decisions (both good and bad) without dwelling on them.

It means you will encourage them, be their cheer leader, let them know how much you love them and then send them on their way.

Let's enjoy this book by Checking It Out Now.
