Devotees of the dog will love this brand-new collection of stories and articles mined from the newspaper pages of yesterday. As with the first volume, its selections range from the humorous, to the dramatic, to the purely factual -- a dog lover's cornucopia.

Read about the extraordinary efforts of a famous veterinarian to save a dog with a broken back. Find out how the 20th century's greatest equestrian painter may have gotten his start portraying canines. See the first dog ever fitted with spectacles. Learn how young women of New York used police dogs to fight the "masher menace." Discover the sneaky tricks of the dog thieves who preyed on the pets of the wealthy, and the methods of the dog detectives whose job was to thwart them.

In the fiction department, you'll laugh at "The New Pup" that treed a whole family. You'll join one of Ireland's great writers in a lovely garden where a young woman discovers both the love of a man and the love of a dog. In "Nobody's Dog" and "Ishmael" you'll follow the fortunes of friendless dogs who finally find homes in the human heart.

There's much more here, too, from short stories about dogs written by children, to a news item about a little boy who risked his life to save a beloved pet from the wheels of a street car.

All the material in this book comes from the pages of newspapers published in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, during what might be called the Golden Age of Newspapers. These wonderful stories and articles (with more to come in future volumes, on different topics) simply deserved to see the light of day again and to be made available for modern readers.

Steve Smith, "head engineer" of the Vintage Newspaper Mining Project, contributes his own notes to this book, providing more details about many of the authors, as well as the historic events and personages mentioned therein.

Spend some time with these dogs of yore and their tales. Then, look for further volumes of good writing (on dogs, cats, horses, automobiles, early aircraft, great disasters, fashion, recipes, and ... ?) still to come, all of it mined from that wonderful mother lode: vintage newspapers.
