Tess Green led a simple life. She was quiet, unpretentious, and kind to a fault. Waitressing full time to pay for college had taken her ten long years, but her hard work was paying off. She was only one semester away from her prized degree. Tank O'Brian, the notorious President of the Steel Horse Cowboys Motorcycle Club, was domineering, magnetic, and all male. He was preparing to enjoy summer at his new camp in Happy, Montana. They were living at opposite ends of the country, immersed in their very different worlds, and totally unaware of a treacherous conspiracy that would throw them together.

This romantic adventure will have your heart racing. First they need to survive their enemies, and then they need to survive each other.

This is the second book in the Happy Montana series. Although each book in the series is its own story, and there are no cliff hangers, it is recommended that you read Finding Happy, the first book in the series before reading this one.
