Faced with the choice of hunting down and killing his human lover or being banished from his werewolf pack, Micah is forced to leave everything and everyone he loves. He finds a new pack in Northern Ontario that is willing to give him refuge. Determined to start over, Micah hopes to find a mate and settle down.

Forensic chemist, Shea, rarely gets any downtime, and that's fine with him. As much as he loves his pack, he's a bit of a loner and has no wish for a mate. After all, his slight anti-social tendencies, added to the fear of having anyone count on him, do not make him mate material. But when a new wolf joins the pack, Shea experiences emotions he's never dealt with before, turning his whole tidy world upside down.

Being well aware Shea isn't looking for a mate, Micah doesn't know if he should pursue the genius or look for a mate elsewhere. But when tragedy strikes and passion ignites, can Shea just let Micah walk away?
