Journal d'un voyageur pendant la guerre: (annoté) (French Edition) George Sand

Quelle année, mon Dieu ! et comme la vie nous a été rigoureuse ! La vie est un bien pourtant, un bien absolu, qui ne se perd ni ne diminue dans le sublime total universel. Les hommes de ce petit monde où nous sommes n'en ont encore qu'une notion confuse, un sentiment fiévreux, douloureux, étroit. Ils font un misérable usage des fugitives années où ils croient pouvoir dire moi, sans songer qu'avant et après cette passagère affirmation, leur moi a déjà été et sera encore un moi inconscient peut-être de l'avenir et du passé, mais toujours plus affirmatif et plus accusé.

Des milliers d'hommes viennent de joncher les champs de bataille de leurs cadavres mutilés. Chers êtres pleurés ! une grande âme s'élève avec la fumée de votre sang injustement, odieusement répandu pour la cause des princes de la terre. Dieu seul sait comment cette âme magnanime se répartira dans les veines de l'humanité ; mais nous savons au moins qu'une partie de la vie de ces morts passe en nous et y décuple l'amour du vrai, l'horreur de la guerre pour la guerre, le besoin d'aimer, le sentiment de la vie idéale, qui n'est autre que la vie normale telle que nous sommes appelés à la connaître. De cette étreinte furieuse de deux races sortira un jour la fraternité, qui est la loi future des races civilisées. Ta mort, ô grand cadavre des armées, ne sera donc pas perdue, et chacun de nous portera dans son sein un des cœurs qui ont cessé de battre.
