When Claire Pratt, a famous and wealthy celebrity anthropologist breaks her neck after falling into an excavation pit, she ends up wearing a halo brace. To save her glamorous image, she persuades her husband, Rufus, a detective story novelist, to hide her out in his former lakeside home in an area of Lake Champlain called Lightning Point, noted for its unusual number of thunderstorms.

However, Rufus's former wife, Gussie, who received the home in the couple's divorce twenty years previously, has turned that home into a thriving Bed and Breakfast.

Claire, a self-absorbed and domineering woman, pays Gussie to close the B&B for several weeks and allow her to keep her famous face hidden while Rufus, already planning to divorce Claire, finishes editing her latest book of excavation memoirs.

As Rufus and Gussie start to fall back in love, a disgruntled Claire becomes obsessed with trying to track down Champ, the mythical monster of Lake Champlain. It is rumored that the creature likes to hang out around the breakwater in front of the Bed and Breakfast when lightning strikes ... and the thunderstorms keep coming ...
