The way to make the world a better place is the ban of survey instead of the abolishment of quota on minimum wages; greedy is a good thing; the welfare allowance for the poor should be canceled Sam Gordon, an economic teacher of high school, opening up a fresh outlook of the real world of Economics, won the admiration from his students. While Laura, an English teacher harboring prejudices and enmities towards Economics, insisted on her view that medicine prices should be restricted to let more people enjoy medical assistance; various preferential policies should be carried out to take care of disadvantaged groups. Vehement debates on commerce, market and policy intervention, etc. were carried out between them. Sam gradually took possession of Laura's adoration while being faced with an awkward situation of being fired by the school.
